HISTORICAL SKETCH

The Indianapolis Urban League, an interracial, nonpartisan, nonprofit, charitable organization, was incorporated in December, 1965. It is an autonomous local affiliate of the National Urban League which was founded in New York City in 1910. The Indianapolis Urban League is the successor organization to the Association for Merit Employment.

The Association for Merit Employment was founded in 1952 as the Job Opportunity Program by the Quaker's American Friends Service Committee although the organization was directed by people of all faiths. The purpose of the organization was the breaking down of the color line on certain jobs which were withheld from Blacks. Albert Gamble served as the first director although the most progress came under the directorship of Harold O. Hatcher from 1956-1961. Alton Earnhart, the last director, resigned in 1965. The association was originally located in the Goodman Building (30 W. Washington) until it was moved to the English Foundation Building (615 N. Alabama) in the late 1950s. The organization continued to operate in name only after the Indianapolis Urban league was established and officially ceased operation in 1967.

The purpose of the Urban League is to eliminate racial discrimination and to create better opportunities for Blacks, the poor, and other minority groups and thus allow them to function in society. The agency is presently organized into three program departments which include the Human Services Program, the Community Education Program, and the Education and Employment Program. The Human Services Program furnishes direct service and/or refers people to appropriate services in the areas of housing, health, welfare, criminal justice, and economic development; advocacy; dissemination of information; counseling; workshops and forums; work with various councils and advisory groups; nonpartisan promotion of community involvement in the political process; and promotion of minority business enterprise and economic development. The Community Education Program provides outreach to thousands of people each year through use of electronic and print media, printed materials, public appearances and community meetings; information to the general public on community issues, problems and special concerns of the IUL constituency; production of radio and television programs; advocacy for constituency; and dissemination of information. The Education and Employment Program provides advocacy for those having problems with schools; encourages parental involvement with their children and schools; provides technical assistance to students, parents, teachers and administrators through workshops and meetings; furnishes information to students and the general public concerning scholarships and financial aid; and offers job counseling, guidance, referral and placement, and job development. In addition, the agency administers special projects such as family math, vocational education, parental involvement, and teen pregnancy prevention.

Throughout its existence, the Indianapolis Urban League's programs have undergone several changes. In the 1970s (from which the majority of this collection's records date) there were four agency sponsored major core programs instead of the present day three. They were: Employment and Economic Development (job counseling, guidance, placement, and referrals); Housing, Health, Welfare and Citizenship Education (including voter education); Education; and Community Education. There were also several special programs which included the Business Development Center which provided loans for business expansion and new businesses, sponsored management seminars for small businesses, and directed an MBA internship program; Project Thrive which was concerned with child abuse and neglect; the Human Relations Consortium which provided workshops and community meetings for parents, school administrators, community people, teachers, and students, and the publication and distribution of printed materials and media programs to ease the concern resulting from the court's decision regarding school desegregation in Indianapolis; the Local Outreach Center, which helped support minority business enterprises; the Clearstream Garden Multi-Service Center and Youth Project, which provided social services to the residents of an isolated public housing project; and summer employment for youths.

The Indianapolis Urban League is a United Way agency and receives financial support from that organization along with corporate and private donations, and government funding. It is governed by a board of directors along with an executive committee and program committees. Sam H. Jones has been the president of the Indianapolis Urban League since its inception. It is presently located at 805 N. Meridian Street in Indianapolis.

Sam Jones is a native of Heidelberg, Mississippi and received his A.B. degree with a major in Social Science from Clark College in Atlanta, Georgia in 1950. After serving in the U.S. Army and a brief teaching career in Heidelberg, Mississippi, Jones returned to college in Atlanta where he received his M.A. in Sociology and a Master of Social Work. Upon graduation he was employed by the Cleveland Urban League from 1957-1961 where he worked first as Job Development and Employment Specialist and later Director of Vocational Services. In 1961 Jones became Executive Director of the Pontiac, Michigan Urban League. He left that position two years later to become director of the St. Paul, Minnesota Urban League where he added some new program areas as well as improving the existing programs. Jones became president of the Indianapolis Urban League in August, 1966, and continues to hold that position in 1988. He received the "Gustafson Award" as the social worker of the year by the Central Indiana Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers in 1969 and a L.H.D. (honorary doctor of humane letters) from Marian College in 1970. Jones is a member of the Academy of Certified Social Workers and is active in many local and national community service organizations.
