BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL SKETCH

J. C. Allen and Sons have been photographing American agricultural life throughout the twentieth century. Founder John Calvin Allen was born 11 September 1881 in Darwin, Illinois. He began farming after his marriage in 1904 to Mary Abby Peavy. Allen purchased his first camera for his honeymoon and quickly developed a passion for photography. Allen started his photography business in 1912 and in 1913 he began work at Purdue University's College of Agriculture. In 1929, his son Chester P. Allen joined the company after graduating from Purdue. Decades later, Chester's son, John O. Allen joined the family business after serving in the Navy and graduating from Purdue. The Allen photography business was, and still is, nationally recognized for its agricultural subjects and excellent photography. J.C. Allen died on 21 July 1976 followed by his son, Chester, who died 10 June 1996 (b. 24 May 1907). The business is still in operation in Lafayette, Indiana, under the management of John O. Allen.

The Indiana State Fair began in 1852 and is the nation's sixth oldest state fair. The purpose of the Fair was to bring together farmers, manufacturers, and residents to share new ideas about agriculture and stimulate industry, with agriculture and livestock as the core components of the Fair. The Indiana State Board of Agriculture selected Camp Sullivan, today Military Park, in Indianapolis as the site for the first State Fair. From 1852–1891 the Fair was held in several different locations; it finally settled into its permanent location in Indianapolis in 1892. The twentieth century witnessed the debut of 4-H in 1912 and the Better Babies Competition in 1920. In 1931, due to the Great Depression, farmers paid their admission fees in wheat instead of cash. Troops occupied the Fairgrounds during the first and second World Wars as they had during the Civil War. In 1947 the Indiana State Fair Board was established and in 1952 during its centennial, the Fair won an award as the Finest Agricultural Fair in the nation.

The Center for Agricultural Science and Heritage is a nonprofit organization that bridges members of the agricultural community to the consumer public through education.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The collection was donated by the Center for Agricultural Science and Heritage (The Barn), located on the Indiana State Fairgrounds in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Most of the images were taken by J.C. Allen and his son Chester Allen from 1926–1952. The collection consists of negatives (glass plate, nitrate, and acetate) with a small percentage of black and white photographs. All Allen images show events and people at the Indiana State Fairs unless otherwise noted. For example, several images in 1929 and 1930 were taken at National Swine Shows held at the Fairgrounds.

Descriptions for most images were provided by the J.C. Allen and Son Company photographers. In many cases they identified individuals in an image as well as their hometown, county, and dates. The information provided in square brackets [] was added by the processors with extra information found on the subjects. The Allen negatives and photographs are organized into series according to the year that the photographs were taken and maintain the original order and numbering system established by the Allens.

During processing many of the negatives for the years 1926 and 1927 were found to be severely damaged so those years have few images. The images for the years during WWII are also limited as the Fair was cancelled from 1942–1945. There are some images for the 4H Club Fair of 1943 and the Hampshire Swine Show in 1945.

Series 1–24: Indiana State Fair 1926 to 1951. Photographs and manuscript materials.

Series 25: Purdue University 4-H Club Round-Up Awards, June 1952.

Series 26: Stock photographs from the files of the Center for Agricultural Science and Heritage. Most of these images were taken by other photographers from around the country. .

Other photographers in Series 26: ACME Newspictures, John W. Busch, Marvin F. Carter, T.I.
