BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

Katharine Watson was born on 12 June 1902. Her parents, Philemon Watson and Genevieve Bassel, were prominent members of Indianapolis, Ind., society. Her maternal grandparents, the Frasers, were likewise major figures in Indianapolis. They rented Benjamin Harrison's home during his residence in Washington, D.C., and they were also friends with James Whitcomb Riley and Booth Tarkington.

The young Katharine and her brother John lived with their parents in their grandmother Frasers' house. The children enjoyed playing with their neighborhood friends; Katharine even had a pulley-line strung from her bedroom to that of her best friend so they could exchange notes in the middle of the night. She went to Tudor School from elementary through high school. After graduating from high school, she spent time in England with her uncle John W. Davis, who was an ambassador to the court of St. James.

She married Elias Cornelius Atkins on 18 February 1922. They had one son, Elias Cornelius III. Katherine Watson Atkins died on 20 June 1993 and is buried in Crown Hill Cemetery in Indianapolis.

James Glass is currently Professor of Architecture at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana.
