One of the oldest and finest construction traditions in the Midwest, the four-generation Hagerman Group consists of three outstanding construction firms: Hagerman Construction, GDH and Hagerman Inc.

Founded in 1908 in Fort Wayne by William Hagerman and brother-in-law Frederick Buesching, The Hagerman Group has been a family business from the beginning. As the mantle has been passed from William in the early 1900s to his sons Ted and Pete in the 1940s onto Ted's son Mark in the 1970s, Hagerman has continued to grow as a major construction presence in Indiana. Today, Mark and his son Jeff are chairman and president of The Hagerman Group.

Hagerman Inc. was created in 1992 to offer additional general contracting services with greater delivery flexibility. Six years later, Hagerman Construction grew again upon acquiring Geupel DeMars, a nationally recognized construction manager with significant high-profile Central Indiana projects on its record. Since its inception in 1927, Geupel DeMars has grown from a small construction company to a prominent construction manager under the banner of Geupel DeMars Hagerman, today known as GDH.

The industry has changed over the years, but we've never lost sight of our original vision of excellence through commitment to quality, service and integrity. It's a commitment that runs throughout the company, touching each employee, effectively influencing everything we do.
