

Montgomery County, Crawfordsville Daybook, December 1850 and December 1851

Natalie Burriss and Rachel Christine Fulk

Daybooks were used in businesses to record sales transactions. While making sales, merchants did not have time to look up each individual's account in the ledger—a permanent record of a customer's purchasing history. Instead a daybook was used. This was a comprehensive and chronological list of all purchases made in a specific time period, usually organized by days. Later, the merchant would add the entries into each individual customer's account in the ledger.<sup>1</sup>

Below are names found in a daybook from a general store in Crawfordsville, Indiana, dated between December 1850 and the beginning of January 1852.<sup>2</sup> During this time, customers purchased a wide range of items, including butter, coffee, tobacco, calico, and bundles of wood. We also see a cross section of the population represented on these pages, giving us a glimpse into Crawfordsville and its surrounding area in the mid-1800s. Not only are family relationships reflected in some of the entries, but vocations are noted, as well. Doctors are seen to have patronized this establishment, along with ministers, teachers, students, and even a judge. The owner of the store is not definitely known. However, a William H. Boynton may have had some hand in the management if not the ownership of the store.<sup>3</sup>

The following records list customer names as they appear in this daybook for December 1850 and December 1851. Page numbers from the daybook are included, as are names of individuals purchasing items under accounts not their own. Editorial additions are included in brackets.

Notes

1. Marty Schmidt, "Journal, Daybook, Book of Original Entry, Explained," in Business Encyclopedia, <https://www.business-case-analysis.com/journal.html>.

2. Daybook of a Crawfordsville Merchant, 1850–1852, F 0026, Indiana Historical Society. Since these records begin on page 51, it is possible that there was more to this daybook than what we have now. Previous pages may have been destroyed accidentally or intentionally ripped out.
3. A note from the collection processor at the beginning of the manuscript suggests Boynton’s involvement, owing to the discount that is given to him on page 305 of the daybook.
